Unlike the regular, common long-grained rice (indica rice) all over the world, what produced by Taiwan, Japan, and Korea is the round-grained non-glutinous rice (japonica rice) of oval shape. Whereas the texture of indica rice is comparatively dry and loose, the quality of japonica rice is rather of strong stickiness with moderately soft, moist, and al dente texture. With the development of outstanding variety improvement and cultivation techniques, Taiwan is able to product more than 10 premium rice varieties. The largest, most beauteous paddy filed landscape can be perceived in regions including Taitung Chishang, Ilan Dungshan, Tainan Houbi, Changhua Ershui, Mioali Yuanli, and etc. The savor, planting variety, and cultivar of the rice vary from place to place. Taiken 9 does not become dry and chewy even if it has gone cold, which makes it suitable for plain rice meals or sushi dishes; Carrying a taro flavor, Tainung No. 71 (Yihchuan Aromatic Rice) is the famous invincible of paddy competition; the hearty, al dente, and sticky Taiken 2 is of a large size. It is particularly suitable for preparing fired rice; Tainan No. 11 is the country's first high-yielding rice variety, with its quality highly praised by the Japanese; though with unattractive appearance, the popular Kaohsiung No. 139, also known as "the ugly beauty", is with an awesome mouthfeel and stickiness.

Take a glance at the paddy waves and have a bite of the aromatic rice. Go down to the paddy fields to experience the farming chores, such as rice reaping, rice shoots transplanting, and mochi pounding. The rice and paddy filed of Taiwan is not just a scrumptious treat, charming scenery; it is also a relish with an enjoyable delight.

seafood to aquaculture and leisure, unique fishing methods and trading spectacles can be seen

Every summer, the fishermen in North Coast Jinshan exploit the flashy blaze of light produced by sulfur stones to catch schools of scaled sardine by attracting their leap into the hand operating dip net. As thousands of thousands of fish stocks bound under the spotlight, the fishermen smile radiantly and embrace the harvesting moment. "Sulfuric Fire Fishing" is not intensively close to the sea surface. The fishermen will throw out swiftly the harpoon to spear the swordfish that swim speedily like a sprinter. "Spear fishing" is not just a method of fishing but the desperately fight of the fisher folks as they have to take the risk of getting injured or falling overboard for obtaining high income and the freshest delicacies without fishy

A tableau of more abundance is displayed when it comes to the making of mullet roes around Taiwan's native coffee beans are of excellent quality and distinctive flavor. However, since the coffee beans are mostly organically planted and man-made gathered by farmers, the yields are rather in small volume with costly prices. The native coffee beans are the apple of many coffee experts' eyes.

Similar to tea leaves, different altitudes, climatic conditions, and soil environments produce varied terroirs. For example, the aftertaste of Alishan coffee is impeccable because of its high altitude; Hualien Ruisui had once been one of the three major coffee origins in Taiwan during the Japanese colonial period; Yunlin Gukeng is the first production area that has
